Disability Discrimination Act 1995

Under this Act, employers have a duty to make reasonable adjustments where compared to a non-disabled person, a disabled person is substantially disadvantaged by either the working arrangements (which includes the recruitment process) or the working environment.

The Act defines a disabled person in the following way:

“A disabled person is anyone who has or has had a physical or mental impairment which has a substantial and long term effect on their ability to carry out normal day to day activities.”

You should be aware that we may ask you to give details of your disability should you be invited to interview. Any supporting information, for example a letter from a Disability Employment Advisor, would be helpful.

There is no legal requirement for you to provide the information requested. However, you are encouraged to do so, particularly where you believe that the information may be relevant to the job application.
